21ST-CENTURY SOCIOLOGY

SERIES EDITOR: Steven Seidman, State University of New York at Albany

The 21st-Century Sociology series provides instructors and students with key texts in sociology that speak with a distinct sociological voice and offer thoughtful and original perspectives. The texts reflect current discussions in and beyond sociology, avoiding standard textbook definitions to engage students in critical thinking and new ideas. Prominent scholars in various fields of social inquiry combine theoretical perspectives with the latest research to present accessible syntheses for students as we move further into the new millennium amidst rapid social change.

Acknowledgments

A number of people helped me to write this book, and I would like to take the opportunity to thank them. Several individuals provided me with especially sage advice along the way, particularly as I wrestled with getting a handle on the vast literature on multiculturalism and transnationalism that has appeared on the scene in recent years. These include Richard Alba, Martin Bulmer, Herbert Gans, Harry Gouldbourne, Tariq Modood, Ewa Morawska, Janusz Mucha, Joane Nagel, Alejandro Portes, John Solomos, and Rudy Vecoli. In addition, friends at my home institution not only supplied valuable insights at various junctures, but also provided needed encouragement: John Guidry, Rick Jurasek, Mike Kirn, and Rocky Sexton. Readers of the entire manuscript are to be thanked. Kevin Fox Gotham's comments were most helpful. Thomas Faist was especially helpful in preventing me from making a number of factual errors in connection with the European scene. But more than that, Thomas was the most important sounding board I had throughout the entire process, and for that I am most appreciative. I would like to thank Steven Gold for his contribution to this project. Steve provided me with an extraordinarily detailed commentary and analysis of my first draft, which proved to be invaluable in preparing the final version of the manuscript.

Once again Jean Sottos, our departmental secretary, played a key role in assisting me with word-processing, preparing charts and tables, and other related nitty-gritty tasks. Despite the chaos that frequently characterizes our office, she always did so with great aplomb and grace.

Thanks to Steve Seidman, 21st Century Sociology Series editor, for asking me to sign on to this project. I am very happy to be part of such a fine series. Thanks also to my editor, Susan Rabinowitz. Working with Susan proved to be a distinct pleasure: she is a perceptive critic, with a clear sense of how to make a book better and how to get the best out of her authors. Since Susan was away on maternity leave during part of the time I was writing, I was most fortunate to be able to work closely with the highly capable Ken Provencher for several months and found that to be a rewarding experience.

Once again, the usual suspects at home helped to make this possible. My wife, Susan, is always my main source of inspiration and my biggest cheerleader. For that, I cannot begin to repay what I owe her. My children, Sarah and Aaron, in their own quiet ways continue to be sources of support.

This book is dedicated to my teacher, Stanford M. Lyman, the person who got me interested in the study of ethnic relations over a quarter of a century ago at the New School for Social Research. Stan's scholarly contributions to this field, his role as a mentor, his passion, wit, and loyalty all had a profound impact on my intellectual development. This book is a small effort aimed at repaying the debt I owe him.
